INTRODUCTION:

It is most likely that some people may question ‘Consciousness’ is designated as one of the independent discipline of modern science. In this connection it should be noted that from Indian perspective ‘Consciousness’ has always been considered an established science since times immemorial. The Sanskrit words like ‘Samvid’ and ‘Vijnana’ have been frequently used in Sanskrit literature for the ‘One Supreme Consciousness’ – the ultimate reality. It has its own technology and fulfills all the conditions not only for the discipline of science but also that of the ‘Art’ as well and such concepts have been improved upon from time to time along with the experiential depth whenever deemed necessary.

The second subhead, ‘Psychotherapy’ should not be considered again as a misnomer to represent only for the ‘Curative’ aspect of treatment of mental ailments only as it also cares for the restoration of the previous status of health of the individual and much more than that for adopting additional measures for further protection, preservation and promotion of health as an upward ascent through temporal to transcendental one i.e. the optimum fullness of the health continuum as envisaged by ancient Indian seers and sages. This forms part of creative psychotherapy.

Next, the term ‘YOGA PRAXIS’ is not only inclusive of the yogic techniques, procedures and other relevant phenomena but along with that the word praxis sums up the entire realm of yogic practices adopted by the practitioners. It is more comprehensive than the simple term ‘Practice’ as the former refers also to the principles that inform various practices. Praxis is closer to principles than to simple term ‘Practice’. It is the applied principles as distinct and differentiated from static theories. It is here that the paper presenters are expected to give more emphasis to reveal the principles involved along with practices these are applied to. Therefore the Sanskrit word ‘Sadhana’ is an appropriate equivalent to praxis.
